Simple and easy to use. • To edit a term you can choose which “prefix” you want to work on. • For example, in the left-side menu you can choose to edit the term “demo” to “description” • This function can be especially useful in situations where you want to modify the translation part of the text. • You can also choose to edit the terms inside the table within Memsourc and the matches panel in memoQ • When you perform a match between a term and a phrase, you can choose to either keep the terms or switch the whole phrase to a different form of this term. Let’s face it, translators are the custodians of terminology.

While we may not agree on what we should call it, this fact of life cannot be ignored, and even more so as the volume of terminology increases on our desks every single day. That’s why you have to make sure that what you call this stuff is correct, and correct consistently across your work. As translators, we may not always know the correct and accepted way to articulate a particular term, but we all have the right and the responsibility to call it correctly. For that reason, we have chosen to provide you with a solution to help you identify and look for correct terminology. Term Finder helps you solve these issues in a quick and efficient way – saving you precious time and also the frustration of the incorrect use of terminology. While it might not be the perfect tool to do this, it does have a number of great features that make it extremely useful in any translation project: Spot the difference between homographs, neologisms, synonyms and antonyms. Simultaneously select the terms that belong to the same category. Compare a term to a sentence, and display the results side by side. Quickly access a wordlist by building upon a database. Create your own list of synonyms. Like the old saying goes, there’s a specific time and place for everything. This time, however, the problem isn’t when you should use this software. In the translation industry, we use software every single day. And like many other aspects of our work, if something isn’t right, we can ask for help. However, you can’t have two translators who used the same software. In fact, the translations will never be 100% identical, and
