Detailed Folder Size: 733.5 MB Developer: Tag-it 3.4.0 & 5.9.0 Platform: Mac OS X 10.8.0 (12B26) Category: Utilities Price: $39.95 (for non-commercial use) Try the live demo here Sometimes, the software we really want to like is one that doesn't just live up to our expectations - it surpasses them. Case in point, the game Elite: Dangerous, which has become a cult sensation on PlayStation 4, Xbox One and PC. For our latest screenshot tour of Space, we spent some time with the game and you can watch the full video for yourself above. The game has been likened to the likes of recent First-Person Shooters such as Titanfall or Borderlands, but one of the biggest draws is the ability to pilot your own ship and explore huge and dynamic environments. Some virtual worlds may have you fighting off alien lifeforms and droves of AI antagonists, but you really need to be up in this game. And despite some issues with out-of-character AI behavior, and some bugs with the player-created ships and AI pilots, Elite: Dangerous is a beautiful and immersive game - even the menus. The next section in our Elite: Dangerous screenshot tour takes us into the home of players, what we like to call the friends list. Here, you can meet new and familiar AI pilots, and players that happen to be scanning for alien life. Keeping with the theme of the game, we've also included this shot of the 'Drone' hunting down a target. The vastness of the game is amazing, and we can only wonder what else is out there. It feels a bit like an MMORPG but in space. Staring back at you are your stats on one of the smaller ships - so what better way to break down some numbers than by shooting them. Next up is the habit of many games, the radar, which shows you just where everyone else is, and also informs you about their health state, so you can make your move. For those that like to do the same, this is the opportunity to fight your enemies head on. The screenshot gallery continues with this view of a battleship - the 'Eden' class. On the hunt, the nearest alien ship you can see is the 'Rusted' character on the left. In the background the nearest b7e8fdf5c8
